End of Life Doulas are an emerging profession. Complimenting the work of the medical community and hospice palliative care workers and volunteers, End of Life Doulas are advocates for their clients and assist them in creating and carrying out their health-care treatment decisions while providing care and support to their clients' family and friends. This program is ideal for those already acting in this kind of support role such as Personal Support Workers, Social Workers, Informal Caregivers, including friends and family of individuals facing the end of life journey. The End of Life Doula;

- advocates for the best possible experience for the client, based on each client's unique situation;
- assists clients in creating and carrying out their health care treatment decisions;
- shares information about legalities, options, and tools;
- facilitates communication between client, family and other care providers; and
- protects the client's dignity and the family's memory during the dying experience.
